Stronger blacklisting protections – reps' checklist

Here's how you can use the stronger blacklisting protections to defend activists and lawful union activity in your workplace.

1. Make sure members understand the protection

- ☐ Let members know the protection for taking part in lawful industrial action is now stronger and their participation less risky.

2. Record any suspected attempts at blacklisting

- ☐ Encourage members to report any threats or suspected punishments linked to ballots or strikes.
- ☐ Ask members to tell you if they suspect they're being refused work because of union activity.

3. Help your union fight blacklisting

- ☐ Keep detailed records of all suspected blacklisting cases so your union can use them for any future legal and enforcement procedures.
- ☐ Escalate concerns through your union, so potential claims can be investigated using the new law.
